Curiosities On California Beaches

California has some amazing beaches with beautiful coastlines but there are also some very strange things to see as well. These man-made curiosities are not easy to find and you might have to wait for the tide to go out but it's worth the adventure of finding them.

Mysterious Tower

Tucked around the corner to the north from Victoria Beach in Laguna Beach there's a tower that looks like it belongs on the coast of Scotland instead of Southern California. This tower, nicknamed "La Tour" was built in 1926 to provide a protected spiral stairway from the house on the bluff to the beach below.

Sutro Baths San Francisco

On the shore about a half-mile north of Golden Gate Park in San Francisco you'll find the remains of an historic bathhouse known as the Sutro Baths. The Baths were opened to the public in 1896, but eventually shuttered in the 1960s. After an arson fire in 1966 burned the buildings down the only things left were the foundations.

Green Rings of Emma Wood

At low tide a couple large mossy rings are exposed in the sand of Emma Wood State Beach in Ventura. These rings and the concrete chunks inside them are World War II military gun placements called Panama Mounts. The guns that once stood here had support arms that rotated on the steel rails that are cast into the concrete rings.

Concrete Ship At Seacliff

It's hard to believe that concrete ships would ever make sense, but during World War I and II a small number were constructed. Most were eventually used as jetties and breakwaters or deliberately sunk in deeper waters. At Seacliff State Beach in Aptos you can still see one of them, the SS Palo Alto was beached in 1929 to be used as an entertainment venue.

Labyrinth At Lands End

On a flat spot above Mile Rock Beach in the Lands End area of San Francisco you'll find a Labyrinth with colorful rocks. Walk in one side and try to find your way through the maze to exit on the other side.

Golden Dog Man

If you walk the beach below Fort Funston in San Francisco, you'll find many concrete structures that are both military and utility in origin. Facing the ocean on one of the largest structures a gold painted sculpture of person with a dog's head
